

Man Talk

Description

This episode is for the guys. In this raw and honest conversation, Kevin dives into the unique challenges of being a disabled man in America. He shares his personal experiences and insights on topics that are rarely discussed, from navigating the complexities of dating and relationships to combating the feeling of being "emasculated" by a society that often sees men with disabilities as children.

This episode aims to give men with disabilities a confidence boost and remind them of their value. Kevin emphasizes the importance of self-acceptance and provides a candid perspective on topics like intimacy, financial fears, and gaining acceptance from a partner's family. He also challenges the ableist idea that people with disabilities should only date each other, advocating for a focus on being kind, being yourself, and finding a partner who sees you for who you are, not for your disability.
